Intelcom further expands its Canadian network with operations in Whitehorse and Yellowknife

This enables shorter delivery times and a marked improvement in the consumer experience. among other advantages

Montréal, October 7, 2021 – Canadian logistics company Intelcom is continuing its national rollout with the launch of its last-kilometre delivery services in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, specifically in the cities of Whitehorse and Yellowknife.

With this new breakthrough, Intelcom is expanding its presence across the country by offering its last-kilometre delivery services in all Canadian provinces, in addition to these two territories.

“Our arrival in Whitehorse and Yellowknife is prompted by two main factors: our commitment to providing reliable and predictable home delivery service across the country, and our clients’ interest in improving the online shopping experience for consumers in these cities,” explains Intelcom President François Poliquin. “Besides the importance of online commerce during the pandemic, we firmly believe that the quality and efficiency of our last-kilometre delivery services substantially enhances the consumer experience when they are completing a purchase.”

Intelcom’s arrival will considerably shorten delivery times for purchases made from the company’s clients. The consumer will also benefit from a more predictable delivery experience, with notification within three hours of delivery and photographic evidence sent by e-mail once the package is delivered. Finally, Intelcom’s entry into these markets is accompanied by seven-day-a-week delivery capability.
